

Tour a Midwestern barn-inspired home with gorgeous rustic details

By One Kindsign October 28, 2020

Filed Under: Architecture

 1 comment

This Midwestern barn-inspired home was designed by Plaad Office, nestled slope-side in the exclusive Lewis Ranch neighborhood of Copper Mountain, Colorado. Unique and contemporary milk house light fixtures accent the exterior timber framing and antiqued concrete finish of this 7,155 square foot, six-bedroom, eight-bathroom home.

As a nod to the Copper Mountain lifestyle and exclusive location on the resort, copper fixtures, and details can be found throughout this exquisite dwelling. Continue below to view the rest of this incredible home...

Project Team: Architecture: Plaad Office | Builder: Pinnacle Mountain Homes | Interior Design: Collective Design Group

What We Love: This barn-inspired home offers its inhabitants a warm and inviting atmosphere that is comfortable and stylish for family living and entertaining. Magnificent surroundings add to the overall appeal of this home, showcased through large windows throughout this home. We are especially loving the spectacular great room with its soaring ceiling, gorgeous material palette, and welcoming details.

Tell Us: What do you think of the architectural style of this home? Please share with us what details you found most appealing and why in the Comments below!

Note: Have a look at a couple of other amazing home tours that we have featured here on One Kindedesign from the state of Colorado: Captivating modern-rustic home in the Colorado mountains and Urban farmhouse exudes a refreshingly chic style in the Rocky Mountains.